“HMMM,” said Stuffy Pig to himself, “what’s this?”

The fat little porker was paying a visit at the home of his friend, Pink. As he sat in the living room, waiting for Pink to join him, Stuffy’s eyes had fallen on a brand-new, glistening, untouched box of chocolates!

“Yummmmm!” said Stuffy Pig. “Could I go for that! But it doesn’t belong to me! And I haven’t been asked to help myself! I guess I’d better not touch it!”

But Stuffy Pig was very greedy and couldn’t resist temptation. “I’ll just open the box and peek inside,” he determined. “I won’t even touch a single chocolate!”

Carefully, silently, he slid the ribbon off the box and raised the lid. The sweet fragrance of fresh chocolates made his snout twitch.

“Just one,” he sighed, reaching into the box. “They’ll never know the difference!”

Gulp! Down went the chocolate. But Stuffy was by no means satisfied.

“Another one,” he said. “As long as I’ve taken one. . . .”

The chocolates were delicious. They were so very good that the greedy pig couldn’t control himself. Eating as quickly as possible, he crammed the contents of the whole box into his mouth. He scarcely took time to chew, for he feared that Pink might come in soon!

Suddenly, Stuffy made a discovery. “Why, there’s nothing left!” he said. “I’d better close the box and get the ribbon back on! Gosh, I guess I don’t know my own appetite!”

Hastily, he closed the box and put the ribbon on. When Pink came into the room, Stuffy said, “I guess it’s too late to go out and play now, Pink, If . . . if you don’t mind . . . I’m goin’ home!”

To tell the truth, Stuffy had to go home! Those stolen chocolates, so quickly eaten, were beginning to give him the most awful pains in his tummy!

By the time he got home, Stuffy was doubled up with pain and moaning and groaning. All night, he regretted his piggishness, for he had never been so sick in his life!

Early next morning, after a sleepless night of misery, Stuffy was able to sit up at last. “Oh, oh, oh!” he exclaimed. “I’ll never eat another chocolate again!”

Just then, there was a knock on the door.

“Come in,” said Stuffy feehly.

“Hiya, Stuffy!” Pink came in, carrying a parcel. “Bet ya thought I’d forgotten your birthday! Well, I haven’t and here’s a present!”

He held out a very familiar-looking candy-box. “Why, Stuffy!” said Pink. “What’s wrong?”

The only answer Stuffy could give was, “Ooooooh!”

TUG-O-WAR

"I'll kill everybody in Little Town!" raged Giant Gorilla, storming through the streets. "I tell you, I can't stand it any longer! I'm going mad!" And he picked up a handful of huge rocks and tossed them at the innocent town folk.

The reason for Giant Gorilla's rage was this . . . he had a very bad toothache! It was so bad that it made him hurt all over and that in turn made him furious. Whenever anyone tried to come close enough to help him, he would have a spasm of pain and reach out with his long arms, frightening the townfolk.

"I can't stand it a minute longer," he growled, rushing through the streets. "I'll . . . I'll . . ." and he picked up some more rocks and threw them through a window.

"Oh-ho!" thought Pee-Wee Monkey. "Giant Gorilla is really getting dangerous. Unless somebody does something, anything may happen! Perhaps I had better . . . aha!"

Pee-Wee's "aha" meant that he had an idea. And when Pee-Wee had an idea, he acted on it . . . fast! Climbing to the bell tower of Town Hall, Pee-Wee caught the bell rope in his tight fist. Then he yelled loudly, "Look at the funny gorilla with a toothache!"

The taunt seemed to drive Giant Gorilla to insane anger. "Grrr!" he roared, rushing towards the bell tower.

"Come a little closer," Pee-Wee encouraged him.

Just as Giant Gorilla ran under the bell tower, Pee-Wee let go of the bell rope. Zzzip! The rope slid down, carrying the huge bell with it.

The bell crashed onto Giant Gorilla's head. As it did so, it emitted a loud, melodious Bonnnng!

"The bell! What's it ringing for?" All the townsfolk wanted to know as they rushed towards the Town Hall. To their great astonishment, there lay Giant Gorilla, unconscious, under the bell tower!

"Now's our chance!" shouted Pee-Wee. He tied one end of the bell rope around Giant Gorilla's aching tooth. Then he took the other end and said to the astonished onlookers, "Help me pull!"

The townsfolk got the idea. They laid hold of the rope and they tugged . . . and they tugged . . . and they tugged . . . till the tooth came flying out of Giant's mouth at the end of the rope!

"Grrrr!" growled Giant, coming to and seeing all the people of Little Town standing about. "I can't stand it! I'll kill you all! I'll . . . my toothache! It's gone!"

"So's your aching tooth!" said Pee-Wee, laughing.

Giant Gorilla laughed too, for he realized what had happened. "I can't thank you enough," he said to the little monkey.

And neither could the Little Town folk, for Pee-Wee had restored peace and quiet at last!

A HUNDRED TO ONE!

PIPER PUP had a bone . . . a nice, big, juicy bone. And Claws the Hound, knew it! That was why Piper was running for dear life. Running? The little pup was flying, going as fast as he could.

"Oh, brother!" he puffed, scooting along the country road. "If . . . puff . . . Claws . . . pant . . . catches up with me, it'll be the end! He'll do a job on me first, an' then on the bone!"

Behind him, loped Claws the Hound, eyes fastened on the bone. "Oh, brother!" Claws licked his chops. "When I catch that pup, he kin tell the world g'bye! Also the bone!"

Little Piper was running so fast, he could hear his heart pounding away. It was getting kinda tough to breathe, too.

"It's no use!" gasped Piper. "I can't outrun him and I can't outfight him! I'm just too little! It'd be suicide to tackle him by myself . . . and I have no friends to help me. Friends! Friends! Why didn't I think of that before?"

With new hope, Piper Pup changed his course sharply and ran straight towards the town. Behind him, Claws wondered what Piper thought he was doing . . . but he came after him, just the same.

Faster and faster ran the little pup, until he came to a certain building on a side street. For an instant, he stopped to make sure that Claws was still following him.

Piper drew a last deep breath. "Here goes!" he said to himself. "If this doesn't work, I'm a goner!" With that, he dashed straight into the building, with Claws hot on his trail!

"Piper, say yer prayers!" Claws growled, drawing closer to the little pup. But Piper never stopped. He ran straight into a large room, and Claws, coming after him, bared his teeth and snarled.

"Now I've got you!" Claws started to say, but suddenly he gulped. "Huh?" he said, instead. And then again, "Huh?"

For there in that huge room was a gang of the toughest dogs he had ever seen, sharptoothed, threatening, snarling right back at him. He tried to take a step forward, but all the other dogs moved too—straight towards him.

"Yipe!" squeaked Claws. "They . . . they'll moider me! There's at least a hundred of 'em! I never knew Piper has so many friends. I'm leavin'!"

Turning tail, Claws ran out of the building, and never stopped running till he was far, far out of town.

As for Piper Pup, he just yawned, stretched, and settled down to enjoy his bone. "That dumb Claws!!" he smiled, nibbling away. "He never suspected that I made him chase me into a hall of mirrors!"
